How Harry Came Home.

"Six years to-day! what a long time," ighed Maud Merlin, sinking into a low seat by the window, and pressing her sad, white face against the glass. "Ah, me! low happy I was; but it's all over; I shall never be happy again!"

Her dark eyes overflowed with tears, rooms and blazing fires, and large-hearted hospitality. She could see the old garden with its winding borders and cool retreats, and catch the sweet odors of the pinks, and the drowsy murmurs of the bees; and there was the woodbine aroor, beneath which she and Harry sat often together. How well she remembered one evening above all others, an evening in levely June; the air heavy with spicy odors, and a full moon pouring down its glorifying light upon the snowy billows of orchard bloom and the long hedges of crimson roses, weighed down by their own intense perfume. On that evening she had listaned to the story that has been so often repeated, but which never grows old: "Maud, my darling, I love you—will you be my wife?" She recalled the est, surest, and best of all the Pills with which the market abounds. By their occasional use, the blood is purified, the corruptions of the system expelled, obstructions removed, and the whole machinery of life restored to its healthy activity. Internal organs which become riogged and sluggish are cleansed by Aper's Pills, and stimulated into action. Thus incipient disease is changed into health, the value of which change, when reckoned on the vast multitudes who enjoy it, can hardly be computed. Their sugar conting makes them pleasant to take, and preserves their virtues unimpaired for any length of time, so that they are ever fresh, and perfectly reliable. Although searching, they are mild, and operate without disturbance to the constitution, or diet, or occupation.

without disturbance to the constitution, or diet, or occupation.

Full directions are given on the wrapper to each box, how to use them as a Family Physic, and for the following complaints, which these Pills rapidly cure:

For Dyspepsia or Andigestion, Listlessness, Languor and Loss of Appetite, they should be taken moderately to stimulate the stomach, and restore its healthy tone and action.

For Edwer Complaint and its various symptoms, Billous Headhache, Sick Headache, Jaundice or Green Sickness, Billious Coite and Billous Fevers, they should be judiciously taken for each case, to correct the diseased action or remove the obstructions which cause it.

For Dysentery or Diarrhoea, but one mild dose is generally required.

For Eheumatism, Gout, Gravel, Palpitation of the Heart, Pain in the Side, Eack and Loins, they should be continuously taken, as required, to change the diseased action of the system. With such change those complaints disappear.

For Broppy and Bropsical Swellings, they should be taken in large and frequent doses to produce the effect of a drastic purge.

For Suppression, a large dose should be taken as it produces the desired effect by sym-An occasional dose simulates the stomach and bowels, restores the appetite, and invigorates the system. Hence it is often advantageous where no serious derangement exists. One who feels tolerably well, often finds that a dose of these Pills makes him feel decidedly better, from their cleansing and renovating effect on the digestive swareful.

Cole. Counsel for plaintiff, L. D. Smith; for defendant, M. L. Wright and G. W. Bradner. The case excited great interest, and the court room was thronged, so that on Saturday it was found necessary to adjourn from the Justice's office to Engine Hall. Several ladies were in attendance. The counsel on both sides worked hard for their clients, and the proceedings kept the attention of spectators both by the amusement afforded and the principle involved. The case went to the jury at six o'clock, Saturday evening, and after a session of two hours the jury returned a verdict of $55 damages in favor of Mrs. Carpenter.

Religious Services at the County House.

Rev. J. P. Stratton, with the choir of the Presbyterian church and others, numbering in all about forty, held brief re-ligious services in the Poor House and Insane Asylum last Sunday. At the former, without taking a text, Mr. Stratton made a short address whose theme was love, and presenting foreibly the thought that each human being is of more value than the whole perishable, soulless world. The inmates seemed intensely nterested, giving him their undivided attention, and tears rolled down the cheeks of some of them. The services were closed by singing "Jesus lover of my soul," by which they seemed greatly At the Asylum prayer was offered, and five pieces were sung, all of them them with sources of amusement which the poor, crezed people seemed and instruction in the way of reading greatly to enjoy, while "Home sweet moved some to tears. ### Substance of a Speech

In the Oswego County Temperance Convention, on the question of the "Limitations of Government in reference to Temperance," by Rev. B. Holmes.

MR. PRESIDENT :- I am no lawyer, and do not make any pretensions to statesmanship; I shall try, however, i the discussion of this subject, to bring pet of her fathers family, and during her into uso, so far as I may, a little common

Being called upon suddenly, I have had about one hour in which to collect a few thoughts, to which I will try to give utterance, as a sort of framework of an argument, or as the warp of the texture, and leave it with my colleague and others to put in the filling. Civil government is designed for the protection of the people in the enjoyment of their conventional rights. Under a civil government the subjects surrender some of their natural rights for the general good; being compensated by the security enjoyed under the ægis of civil law, especially when in the hands of up-Constitutional governments are limited in their legislative and executive pow-ers by constitutional restrictions. In a government like ours, its powers are limited by a fundamental law; one important object of which is, to protect the rights of minorities against the possible appressions of the majorities.

There are some things, then, that the government may not do, and some things that it may do. We will notice a few things that it nay not do, either constitutionally or

The government may not enact a law to benefit individuals to the prejudice of the public interests. The correctness of this position is based on that conceded democratic principle, viz: "The greatest good to the greatest number." The government may not legalize well-defined crime. Crime is defined to consist in any act that violates law, either human or divine; that violates any rule of man or divine; that violates any rule of moral duty, an offence against the laws of right, prescribed by God or man, or that is pernicious to community, physically, morally or socially; hence, if a government legalizes any such acts, itself becomes criminal. That which is in itself norally wrong cannot be made right by

Our government has no right to create or support by law a privileged class. A privileged class is a "class of persons enjoying certain advantages, privileges and munities not common to others of the uman race.

Especially may the government not create or support a privileged class in crime. This is self-evident; it needs no

The license law creates and supports a privileged class, in that it allows not ed and ninety-nine are

That law does, in fact, create and support a privileged class in crime. It has been established by the records of criminal courts, the testimony of the keep- ly smashed last Saturday, by its getting ers of poor houses, of jails and penitentaries, that at least three-fourths of freight car. all the crimes are perpetrated by persons under the influence of intoxication; Judge Churchill of Oswego has been apand that intoxication caused by liquor obtained at the dram-selling shops. The dram-seller, therefore, with his license, is a great criminal, because he is accessory before the fact to all those crimes that are the direct fruit of his trade. It is on this principle that the civil damage law is founded. These are bargains that every lady be a sumptuary law, and unconstitutional. Temperance men do not ask for a law prescribing what or how much edges the receipt of $100 for the a man may or may not eat or drink. Nor do they ask the government to pro-hibit the manufacturing of alcohol, be-cause the government has no right to forbid the manufacturing of anything, however pernicious in itself. But the government has a right to forbid pernicious articles being used to tempt and injure others; it can't punish one for attempting suicide, but it can for attempting homicide. So the governcent can't prohibit one from drinking alcoholic beverages, but it can and ought to prohibit his making them articles of trade, because of their injurious tend-

Bear Your Cross.

A deaf-mute friend, who feels sad at his lot when he considers that so many around him can hear and speak while he cannot, wants to know our opinion of hi case. That he is sad, is no surprise Doubtless every one of us, deaf-mutes, has his periods of sadness when placed in poculiar circumstances, and feels his loss of hearing and speech keenly. It is a bar, often insurmountable, to a great many things. The deaf-mute everywhere finds himself refused a position because he can-not hear, and often has to stand aside, while another candidate steps in and usurps his place for, seemingly, no other reason than that he possesses the powers of hearing and speech. Also, when holding a position in common with other men, and doing his work as thoroughly aye, as well and better, he not unfrequently sees his co-laborer paid double and triple the amount he himself receives. Happily this is not so every where, and gratifying exceptions are visible on all sides. But in the position which many occupy—that of imparting instruction to those who are like themselves deprived of hearing and speech—irreconcilable as it may seem, it is the rule rather than the exception.

But the deaf-mute through long suf fering has got used to his lot, and so used to it that he is in a manner content. And if pity and sorrow are to come in, they must come from others; he has got so that he can neither pity nor be sorry for himself. After the lapse of many years he has awakened to the great truth that to be happy and successful he must help himself: When seconded by manly deeds."

And he has set himself about it with a vim. He has his own church. his newspaper-his literary society-or if he so pleases to call it, his club. He also has his periodical convention and his college, and when one of his great men dies, he erects a monument to his memory. Once begun to work for himself, he will not stop and ere long he will have other things of his own. This energetic revival on his part is very re-cent, but as it has been of slow growth. it cannot be temporary. There is still a great deal latent in him, and before ong it will come out.

But what do we think of our deafness It is a great misfortune, truly. To nearly all of us medical science is powerless to aid, and we must remain deaf to the end of our days. But let us not suppose there There is a great deal, and though we cannot hear, yet we can be deaf and happy, and in a measure, prosperous. We do not suppose that were a deaf-mute suffered to choose whether he should regain his hearing and lose a leg, he would consent to the exchange. Nor would be exchange his present defect for any other. He prefers to bear the ills he has rather than to fly to those he knows nothing of. But why are we deaf? is the question often made. Why ? indeed : ... "A picture once we saw-"A picture once we saw—Three crosses against the sky,

And the heaviest cross was the highest one; Perhans that answers why."

There is much in divine consolation. and when any of us are disposed to complain at our lot, let us seek it, and let us remember that "Whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth." And when our friend, and others like him, feel bad and wretched because they cannot hear and speak as other men, let them think of this lit-

The April Annals.

The April number of this interesting quarterly has been received, and opens with an article on Visible Speech, by the Principal of the New York Institution for the Improved Instruction of the Deaf and Dumb. Following this comes a statistical letter from Dr. Buxton, of Liverpool, furnished by Henry Winter Syle, the chairman of the Committee on Statistics of the Order of the Elect Surds. The information contained in this letter is valuable. Next we have a very read-able and instructive letter from Mr. B. St. John Ackers, and then a report of the Convention of Teachers of Visible Speech, held Jan. 24th, 1874, at Worcester, Mass. There is also a nice little article by President Gallaudet on the Origin of Deaf-Mute Instruction in Den-

Dr. Palmer, of Canada, writes a timely letter on matters pertaining to the next Convention of Instructors, to be held at his Institution. He gives much information for those who propose to attend, suggests routes of travel, etc. Dr. Peet also has a letter on the same subject, and gives several sound reasons why the Convention was called for the date it was, and describes places of interest to visit and the inducements of the neighborhood for recreation. There should be a large gathering this summer. and there doubtless will be.

In answer to an inquiry from the editor, Dr. Peet writes about the changes to be made in his Institution at the beginning of the coming year, a copy of whose answer appeared in the last number of our Journal. To those who are short but very pleasant call. He is agent for John Matthews, of New York, anxious to know, the letter will be satisfactory, but there will doubtless be some surprise among the old instructors at the modus operandi decided on. At present the first of last February he had sold, it will not do to predict one way or the other, for the plan is an experiment, and goods in that line. We found him so Peet says that "it will not interfere with their (the pupils') intellectual develop- that any deaf-mute seeinghim talking in ment or lower the standard of their attainments," and he certainly ought to at once to be like himself, bereft of hearknow, But how one teacher can teach ing.

Reserving to another number the mode of practicing them in lip reading, and in such ability in speaking as they may be found capable of our present concern is with the means of training them to use the manual alphabet, and through that to the ability to read and write.

Here we pause to answer the question which many an anxious parent will ask which is the best mode of beginning the education in words of a very small deaf-mute child? The advocates of articula-tion say; do not use either signs or the manual alphabet. Speak to the child continually, using only such gestures as everybody can understand. Oblige it to ask for whatever it wants by speaking. foreman, and ready compositors, there is In time it will learn to read at least often repeated words and phrases on your lips, not be done in the little office. It is a and at least to make such imitations of great thing to teach the deaf to set type, speech as those, who are accustomed to hear it, can understand. To this we reply, that while such a plan may in many cases answer well with those children who had learned to pointed printing office, and we hope the time is not far distant when such will talk quite fluently before becoming deaf, in the case of the deaf from birth or early be considered an indispensable auxiliary infancy, it will, in most cases, result in discouraging failures. For the greater number of deaf-mute children signs and the manual alphabet will present the surest, easiest and most pleasant means of early mental development and moral

> There can be no question that the manual alphabet, even when words are spelled at length, is the most convenient mode of using words possible to the deaf. Its convenience would be greatly promoted by using a syllabic alphabet, such, for example, as the present writer devised many years ago, but had then no

(Continued practice will remedy the slowness, as in the case of Laura Bridgman, who converses as fast by holding the hand of her friend in hers as

A child can learn to spell with its fingers at a much earlier age than it can learn to manage a pen or pencil. We have seen children three or four years evinced generally by deaf-mutes in like old spell a few short words as distinctly as any person could. In fact, it is about as easy for a deaf-mute child to

The daily lesson can easily be so managed as to appear to the child an attractive kind of play, especially if instead of, or with pictures, you have little images of animals and other objects. We will suppose that the child is able to run about the room, and that you have two or three familiar objects on a low table or a chair within its reach. Spelling distinctly on your fingers a short name, box, or nut, or cup, for example, your assistant brings the article thus designated. This is done before the child, and it is then encouraged to bring the object itself. If it errs, correct it pleasantly and it with approving smiles and caresses. Beginning with a few objects, gradually words embraces all the letters of the althe objects whose names are spelled to it, vary the exercise by asking it to spell

There is a difference of opinion as to the best way of introducing verbs. The late Dr. Peet began with the actual present, because that form is most perfectly illustrated by pictures, or by living examples, as, Mary is standing; John is sitting; the dog is running, &c. Others would begin with the imperative, as, Mary—stand; John—walk, &c. Both forms, however, are equally important, and both should be early introduced. From intransitive verbs we pass to transitive—John is cating an apple. The dog is biting a pig, &c. Later we introduce prepositions. John is sitting on a fence. Mary is standing on the table. Henry is sitting under the

The difference between the actual and habitual present should be early taught, by coupling the former with now and the latter with sometimes or often. The meaning of these words can be conveyed by a repetition of well chosen examples. The signs we use are tolerably significant, but require to be explained by usage in appropriate circumstances. For now, we present the hands, palms upwards, with mphasis on each side of the person. For sometimes, we touch the palm of the and rather quickly on the left palm. Before advancing so far, the pupil should have learned to write, at least with a pencil. Write before its eyes a series of simple sentences, such as the following:
